Finn played the main female character, the Black Commander. She was great in other sci-fi films but unfortunately not in this one. As for the plot, it wasn't interesting, and after twenty minutes I could tell what would happen next. But at least I enjoyed the soundtrack. Without the amazing songs and lovely melodies, Dreams of Flame would be the most boring sci-fi I've ever seen. And although most viewers found the ending funny, I didn't. It didn't fit this particular film at all and it spoiled it even more than the boring plot.

Dorsey Lighthouse

For more than 200 years, Dorsey Lighthouse, a 34-metre-high stone tower, has stood on the west coast of Scotland to guide ships in the Irish Sea. A lighthouse keeper used to live there to take care of the system of lamps which warned sailors of the rough cliffs. Last year, the lighthouse was out of order for some time because of renovation¹, during which first the roof and then the walls were painted with fresh paint. However, the roof is still green and the walls are still white like before. What's more, the way of operating the lighthouse changed and the lighthouse keeper had to move out as modern technology was installed to do his job. Because of the modern technology visitors are not allowed inside the lighthouse now. Despite this, guests from a nearby hotel complex often come to the viewing point next to Dorsey Lighthouse to enjoy the amazing view of the Irish Sea.

The London Institute Film Festival 2019

10 October – 21 October in London cinemas

» A little bit of history

In 1952, two British film directors, Chris Winter and Ben Knightwick, otázka 30 complained to journalists that London didn't organise any film festivals. So a couple of journalists decided to organise one and asked the London Institute to help. The London Institute couldn't help with organising a festival but it did help them financially. The very next year, the journalists opened the London Institute Film Festival – the first film festival in London. The name Knightwick might seem familiar. It's because Ben Knightwick's grandson is the president of the London Institute today. He is known for supporting film directors because he once dreamt of becoming one himself. otázka 31

But before he could make this dream come true, he got a full-time job in the London Institute.

Although we're sure he would be a great film director, we are lucky he's stayed with the Institute. He's a great president.

» The films

In 2019, you will get a chance to see as many as 243 films, which is the most the festival has ever offered to its audience. otázka 32

The films will compete in the usual competition categories.

Like every year the winner of the Best Newcomer category will receive an award like the winners of the other four competition categories. But what's new this year is that the winner of this category will also be given £20,000 from the London Institute as an extra prize. otázka 33

We Travel The World

It was late 2014 when our lives changed forever. Until then, my husband and I had lived a life that most people would like to live. We were both working in the Toronto film industry, had been happily married for 10 years and owned a beautiful house. Although our lives in the entertainment industry looked perfect, we didn't have time for anything else but work. We just lived to work.

The feeling that our lives were not what they could be first came in 2014 when we went to Thailand on our first holiday together. When we came back, we started thinking about working less and travelling more but we didn't have exact plans yet. Then one day later that year, after a long day at work, we switched on the TV and a documentary about a marathon runner was on. He had changed from a lazy guy to an extreme athlete. We asked ourselves: If he could do something extreme like that, why not us? Before the documentary was over, we knew we wanted to sell our house, say goodbye to our careers and spend our time travelling instead.

Several weeks later, we landed in Cairo with two huge backpacks. They were the first things we bought with the money we got from selling our house. So there we were, in Cairo, ready to start the adventure of a lifetime.

40 When did the couple decide to quit their jobs and travel the world?

- A) while staying in Cairo
- B) after selling their house
- C) during their holiday in Thailand
- D) while watching television one day
